Minimun Prize 2005, Cittadellarte, Fondazione Orestiadi, Tunisi 2005.

Richard Stallman
programmatore, hacker, attivista, principale creatore e organizzatore del progetto GNU / computer programmer, hacker, activist in the free software movement, one of the principal creators and organisers of the GNU.

...there are several possible ways we can go in the future. One direction is a world where the access to forms of communication is strictly controlled, where big companies have the control. Everything with a computer in it will do what they want, not what you want. This is the world of digital restriction. There is also a world where people have the freedom to use technology in the way they themselves have designed and conceived it. Freedom always requires an effort. But it is not a sacrifice, it is a conscious and democratic choice. Today we can consider ourselves lucky for the tools we possess, for the free circulation of knowledge and creativity. How far will this idea of free software take us?